

I would like to say that with the studies that have been done concerning the transmission of broad band internet services over the power they have shown that there is much interference to the amateur bands. With this already been established I see no reason to go any farther with this proceeding. I understand the desire to offer broad band internet service to every one who wants it but I feel that there are better ways to achived it. I believe that since amateur radio was recently named one of the first of the first reponders by the Department of Homeland Security every thing should be done to protect the amature bands not to destroy them. Thankyou